In 1914, on Saturday August 22, Booker T. Washington, one of America's most noted characters traveled through Clearview aboard the Fort Smith and Western Railroad train making whistle stops at various Black towns. James E. Thompson was responsible for his visit to Clearview. At the railroad depot Booker T. Washington was greeted by many school children and local citizens. He was also entertained by the Rough Riders, a group of local horsemen. After a platform speech from the rear of a special passenger coach he traveled west to the town of Boley, some twenty miles away.

This Ft. Smith & Western freight locomotive, fueled by coal and driven only by "Boomer", pulled freight through Clearview in the early 1920's.
