

asking for aid from white groups in Shawnee, Oklahoma City, and other towns.

He evidently met with some success. In August, 1916 Leftwich advertised the opening of the fall term of the Creek and Seminole Agricultural College. The college opened with seven separate departments and operated for about four years.

The only photo I have of the college shows a building which was constructed to house the dining area in the basement, the auditorium on the first floor, and a girls dormitory on the second floor. The cement blocks for all the buildings on campus were made in the cement block factory which was located on the campus. This photo was taken in 1916.

The college operated for about four years. Then Leftwich's whereabouts became unknown and the school closed its doors. Later the Baptist Church within the district purchased the land and improvements thereon - moving all equipment to Okmulgee, Oklahoma to establish a college to be known as the Southwest Creek and Seminole Baptist College.

The Clearview School Superintendents from 1912 to 1969 were: Mrs. Neva Thompson, Mr. E. D. Giddings, Mr. A. M. Thompkins, Mr. Rueben Jones, Mr. Ira D. Hall, Mr. Ferguson Brooks, Mr. F. D. Durham, Mr. Tom Withers, Jr., and Mrs. Rosie Haynes Swain.

The Dependent Schools and their locations within a ten mile radius of Clearview were:

Grassy Lake School-- 3 miles South.

North Fork School-- 3 miles South, 2 miles West, and ½ mile South.

Little Hill School -- 3 miles South, 4 miles West, and ½ mile South.

Gallilee School -- 1 mile West, 2 miles North, and ½ mile West.

Green Hill school -- 3 miles South, 3 miles East, and 3½ miles North.

BUSINESS ESTABLISHMENTS

Although Main Street was never paved or graveled, Clearview saw the best years of growth and prosperity up to the era of the Great Depression (the later part of the twenties and the early thirties).

Pictured here is a business built in 1911 by Alonzo and Nancy Talton, who owned and managed one of Clearview's leading mercantile establishments. This business served the town and surrounding communities for a half century.

This general store furnished the community with practically all its needs from unground coffee to sewing thread; from long johns to overalls. This building was destroyed by fire in 1992.
